ABSTRACT

As the capital of the Ottomans, Istanbul is a dynamic city witnessing building activities initiated by a diverse group of people from different social and economic strata, mostly the ruling elite and dignitaries. In this respect, construction process of the eighteenth-century Istanbul upon the arrival of ruling elite is quite impressing comparing to a period of turmoil through the city in the second half of the seventeenth century. Reflecting this period, Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi' stands out as a valuable work enumerating and presenting various structures, particularly mosques and masjids, constructed until the end of the eighteenth century in Istanbul. Considering its content, the work has an unprecedented encyclopaedical character written by Hüseyin Ayvansarâyî in a relatively systematic way offering a certain order in its order of structures and classification of districts. The thesis aims to analyze this work through mapping of mentioned buildings, and to evaluate its content with a view to investigating the perception of Istanbul according to Ayvansarâyî along with his purpose of writing such a work. For this purpose, numerous structures stated through the work are shown in various maps using one of the tools of the digital history called ArcGIS, a software for georeferencing. Apart from the structures, these maps also reflect spatial positioning of mahalles stated by Ayvansarâyî in the end of each mosque or masjid account; thus, provide possible conclusions concerning Ayvansarâyî's understanding of mahalle. Lastly, differing from previous studies on it, this thesis is based on varying manuscripts of the work, which shows how important it is to see various changes made in its published edition for further studies.

ÖZET

İstanbul, Osmanlı Devleti'nin başkenti olarak başta yönetici elit ve önde gelen devlet erkanı olmak üzere farklı ekonomik ve sosyal tabakadan çeşitli insanların himayesinde inşa faaliyetlerine sahne olmuş dinamik bir şehirdir. Bu bakımdan on sekizinci yüzyılda yönetici elitin şehre dönüşünün akabinde İstanbul'da gerçekleşen inşa faaliyetleri özellikle on yedinci yüzyılın ikinci yarısındaki şehrin çalkantılı dönemi ile karşılaştırıldığında oldukça etkileyicidir. Bu bağlamda, İstanbul'da on sekizinci yüzyılın sonlarına kadar inşa edilmiş câmi ve mescid başta olmak üzere çeşitli yapıları sıralayarak sunan Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi' dönemini yansıtan kıymetli bir eserdir. Yapıların sıralaması ile beldelerin tasnifinde belirli bir düzeni takip ederek görece sistematik bir biçimde Hüseyin Ayvansarâyî tarafından yazılan eser, bu içeriği düşünüldüğünde öncesinde görülmemiş ansiklopedik bir nitelik taşımaktadır. Bu tez eserde zikredilen yapıları haritalandırarak eseri analiz etmeyi ve Ayvansarâyî'nin İstanbul algısı ile bu eseri yazma sebebi çerçevesinde eserin içeriğini değerlendirmeyi amaçlamaktadır. Bu kapsamda eserde zikredilen yapılar, dijital tarihin aygıtlarından ve coğrafi referans vermede kullanılan bir yazılım olan ArcGIS kullanılarak çeşitli haritalarda gösterilmektedir. Yapıların yanı sıra, eserde Ayvansarâyî tarafından her cami ve mescid ile ilgili girdinin sonunda belirtilen mahallelerin mekânsal konumlanışları da bu haritalara yansıtılmakta ve Ayvansarâyî'nin mahalle algısı hakkında muhtemel çıkarımların yapılması sağlanmaktadır. Son olarak bu tezde eser üzerine yapılan önceki çalışmalardan farklı olarak eserin çeşitli yazma nüshaları esas alınmakta ve böylece daha sonra yapılacak çalışmalar için matbu nüshada yapılan değişikliklerin farkında olmanın ne kadar önemli olduğu vurgulanmaktadır.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This thesis has come to an end with the contribution of many precious people that I would like to mention. First and foremost, I am deeply indebted to my thesis advisor Yunus Uğur for his support, encouragement, and guidance throughout my thesis. His seminar classes on urban history and Istanbul were quite valuable for me. Thanks to his constructive criticism and recommendations, I was able to complete this thesis. I would also like to thank the members of the thesis committee, Halil İbrahim Düzenli and Ayşe Başaran.

I would like to express my gratitude to the professors of the courses I attended at Istanbul Şehir University. Firstly, my warmest thanks go to Mehmet Genç whom we lost in March 2021. I find myself very lucky to be a student of him. His class on Ottoman Paleography is one of the things that I will always miss. In addition to his extensive knowledge, I admire of his kindness towards his students. I am also grateful to take the course Ottoman Artistic and Architectural History of Nicole Kançal-Ferrari, who spared her valuable time regardless of spending additional hours for us. Her class has ignited me to study on the eighteenth-century Istanbul. My special thanks also go to Engin Deniz Akarlı, whose feedback and detailed replies to my questions are priceless for me. Additionally, I would like to express my sincere thanks to Abdulhamit Kırmızı whose course of Auto/Biography and Historiography taught me a lot. I enjoyed being in his class which had inspiring and entertaining discussions. Lastly, I am also thankful to Coşkun Çakır from whom I took a seminar on Ottoman economy.

I should also recognize the support and valuable help of many friends in this period. Büşranur Bekman and Fatma Aladağ contributed greatly with their comments and insights. Merve Aydın and Nimet İpek shared their time and encouraged me with their support. During my writing of this thesis, I gratefully acknowledge the patience of my friends Abdullah Kızıltaş, Salih Güç and Halil İbrahim Salman. I would also like to thank Cemre Akman and Zahra Yaşa for a cherished time spent together. I should also appreciate my colleagues who helped me to find some documents, manuscripts, and pieces of information I desperately looked for.

Last but not least, I would like to extend my gratitude to my family for bringing me up and being tolerant to my absence from family gatherings. Above all, I dedicate this thesis to the memory of Istanbul Şehir University.

1. Introduction

1.1. Research Questions and Methodology

This thesis aims to analyze Hüseyin Ayvansarâyî's opus magnum Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi', an encyclopaedical work on Islamic monuments of Ottoman Istanbul, by using ArcGIS, a valuable software for georeferencing and spatial positioning. The work stands out as being unique and unprecedented in terms of the way it covers mosques of Istanbul. In this respect, Ayvansarâyî puts a systematic survey presenting mosques of Istanbul intramuros in alphabetical order starting from the letter "أ" (elif) except of the imperial mosques. As for the other mosques, he does not follow the same order but continues district by district, mainly Eyüp, Galata and Üsküdar along with villages and places located their environs. Although the book is conceived as a guide for mosques of Istanbul only, it is also a reference work for a vast number of structures such as madrasa, mekteb, fountain, dervish lodge etc. and offers a wealth of information concerning the constructors of mentioned monuments along with related personages and dignitaries. Besides, it is significant that Ayvansarâyî states whether the mosques have a mahalle or not in the end of each account.

To use ArcGIS effectively, the above-mentioned data will be firstly exported to an excel file and each type of data will be sorted in its respective column. The excel file would also contain varying names of the structures if any, which will make it more useful. Following that, the geographical coordinates of mentioned structures will be provided right after finding their location with the help of various sources that will be mentioned later. Then, this data would be available for processing in ArcGIS. After that, spatial positioning of these structures will be shown in a light gray canvas basemap. Finally, there would be many maps with multiple layers offering an analysis for the book. The maps will mostly show spatial positioning of mosques (built-as or once-masjid), masjids and mahalles along with other type of structures, thus will serve as a guide for Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'.

Considering the content of the work, one may ponder upon several questions. Why did Ayvansarâyî write such a work? What are the factors that gave him a cause for writing this book if any? Where does the book stand in the literature of its time considering its encyclopaedical character? Why does he continuously state the existence or inexistence of a mahalle belonging to mosque? What does a mahalle refer to in Ayvansarâyî's mind? How does he perceive the topography of Istanbul? Overall, this thesis seeks to come up with possible answers for these questions and contribute to current literature on this book which mostly consists of the transcription of the published edition of the book without a cross-reference to several manuscripts of it. Apart from that, one should know that this thesis gives the list of structures that exist at the time of Ayvansarâyî. For this reason, if a manuscript has an account of a structure built after the death of Ayvansarâyî, the maps and tables shown throughout the thesis do not include their names.

The thesis starts with a few words on the panorama of the eighteenth-century Istanbul and gives the reader the period in which Ayvansarâyî wrote his work. The second chapter is on the life of Ayvansarâyî and his works along with their content. One can also find a list of various manuscripts of his works. Following that, chapter three covers the data summary of Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'. In this respect, the chapter firstly presents a table stating the number of mosques and masjids in each district mentioned in the work and maps showing these districts in Istanbul along with their presumable borders based on the location of the structures as Ayvansarâyî enumerates in their respective accounts. Then, this chapter continues with several maps reflecting the location of structures other than mosques and masjids in Hadîka. Finally, the main part of the chapter gives the data concerning mosques and masjids enumerated in the book. Most importantly, this part offers various maps prepared by making use of ArcGIS and shows the spatial positioning of mosques and masjids in each district which are classified under nine regions. Moreover, it includes again maps indicating whether mentioned mosques and masjids have a mahalle or not as stated by Ayvansarâyî. The last chapter is an analysis of the content of Hadîka through the maps shown in previous chapter.

1.2. Sources

The main source for finding spatial positioning of various structures is certainly Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'. The work itself serves as a guide for discovering the monuments in the city space with certain means that will be mentioned and discussed in the following chapters. Apart from that, throughout the thesis, there are several sources used for determining the locations of structures stated in the book. Howard Crane's translation of Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmî'[1] is one of the main reference works for positioning especially mosques and masjids with its valuable footnotes showing their location together with the names of the streets in most accounts. In addition to its contribution for locating mosques and masjids, the website called "Kültür Envanteri"[2] is quite useful for finding other structures such as madrasa, hammam, dervish lodges. Apart from that, recently published notes of Cemalettin Server Revnakoğlu[3] (d. 1968) on Istanbul is quite important for finding some of the structures that do not exist today. In addition, there are some other works which focus on either mosques and masjids of a certain district or positioning of a certain type of structure. One of them is a book called Fatih Camileri ve Mescidleri[4] published in 2017 concerning mosques of Fatih district along with those nonexistent today. Another one is a book on the fountains of Istanbul written by İbrahim Hilmi Tanışık, a work consisting of two volumes published in 1943-45.[5] As for madrasas, Mübahat Kütükoğlu's article on the madrasas that active in 1866 is one of the sources that used in this thesis.[6] Apart from that, there are some maps showing the location of the structures in Istanbul, which are one of the major references for positioning them. These maps are as follows: Map of Istanbul in 1845 prepared by the students of the Imperial School of Military Engineering[7], Müller Wiener Map of Istanbul published in 1977[8], Alman Mavileri[9], the insurance maps of Charles Edouard Goad[10] and Jacques Pervititch[11], topographical and Archaeological Plan of Galata prepared by Schneider and Nomidis in 1944[12], Istanbul City Walls Project initiated by Koç University[13]. Lastly, there are also some theses referred for finding certain structures and sometimes *mahalle*s.[14]

1.3. Literature Review: The Eighteenth-Century Ottoman Istanbul

It is argued that historians tend to neglect the eighteenth century Ottoman history comparing to other periods such as post-Tanzimat era when the institutionalization is in progress and rich in terms of documents and sources, or the classical age marked with greatness.[15] This period is sometimes evaluated on the basis of age-old decline-fall paradigm which upholds a Eurocentric approach to a certain extent and makes way for the arguments based on westernization set the agenda. However, the eighteenth century in general is a period in which various internal and external dynamics are effective on the Ottoman realm.[16] There are also numerous works covering various aspects of the period or certain timeframes in different perspectives and arguments.[17]

Considering economic problems, unsuccessful military campaigns, rebellions, famine, and various conflicts, it seems that the Ottomans came up with a number of attempts to boost up its economy via several means such as manufacturing and agricultural outputs.[18] Apart from that, one can also observe that there are some social developments occurred in the state emanating from the initiation of the sultans and the ruling elite who led a change or variation through the use of some internal dynamics or adaption outside the Ottoman realm.[19] In this respect, as the capital of the Ottomans, one may look for consequences of this attempts in Istanbul with a focus on different aspects of the city.

When it comes to mention the panorama of the eighteenth-century Istanbul briefly, one may choose the return of the sultan along with the ruling elite to Istanbul upon the 1703 rebellion as a starting point. In addition to the arrival of the sultan and the ruling elite, one can also observe a population mobility and migration to three main districts of Istanbul; Eyüp, Galata and Üsküdar in the eighteenth century,[20] which led a disorder in social harmony causing different crimes varying from robbery, murder and assault, and thus the Ottomans implemented various means of social policing and control.[21] Apart from that, the officials had to get through with plagues, flames and earthquakes, especially the one occurred in May 1766, to maintain the order and provide the sustainability in Istanbul along with provisioning the city.[22]

Following their arrival to the city, the ruling elite led to construction of various structures such as fountains, *sebil*s, libraries and mosques showing their legitimacy and authority over Istanbul which got through a period of turmoil between the mid-seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries.[23] The pace of construction process in this period are reminiscent of that of Mehmed II's initiation of building and reconstructing the city along with the patronage of his viziers following the capture of Constantinople by the Ottomans.[24] The construction of kiosks, seaside mansions and palaces are one of the common practices of the sultan and the ruling elite through the eighteenth century. Whereas the coastline of Golden Horn-Eyüp and Kağıthane, namely the sweet waters of Europe, were the favored spots in constructing large-scale of kiosks and mansions in the reign of Ahmed III, the shores of the Bosporus were preferred by the following sultans.[25] Differing from the Rumelian coast of the Bosporus, the Anatolian coast were especially famous for its pleasure gardens and natural parks while the former was dotted with summer palaces and kiosks located various districts and villages such as Tophane and Beşiktaş.[26] Besides, one of the discernible characteristics of the period, it is argued,[27] is the growing role of constructors under varying titles, social and economic status as the patrons of the construction process, and in this respect, the titles such as efendi, çelebi, paşa and bey are commonly seen among the constructors. Moreover, another significant point is the number of the female members from the house of Osman among the constructors which are very high considering the 16th century.[28]

The new taste in architecture and growing number of various structures are among striking features of the period. One can observe the reflections of the Ottoman baroque on newly constructed structures of this century such as mosques like Nuruosmaniye, Laleli and Ayazma or various fountains and *sebil*s like the fountain of Mahmud I, the sebil of Mehmed Emin Ağa.[29] Besides, the libraries are also significant in number comparing to previous centuries. The libraries that built in the eighteenth century also catches the attention in their design and layout. Stand-alone libraries and again free-standing fountains were on the rise unlike the previous years that these two were mostly components of mosque complexes. Besides, these libraries reflect the intellectual taste of their owners as noticed in the book collections they include, which may indicate an expansion in the size of the intellectual elite of that time considering their initiation of constructing new libraries.[30]

Apart from that, the chronograms that inscribed on the buildings show how the founders and dignitaries of the period perceive these structures in various designs and forms. The words such as nev-îcâd, cedîd, bedî in the chronograms are conceived as some of the signs of creativity and authenticity of the structures built at that time.[31] Moreover, the number of mecmuas (collected volumes) covering diverse topics outside the theology are also worth to mention.[32] It is argued that the rising popularity of mecmuas starting from the seventeenth century can be related to increasing number of libraries in following century.[33] In this respect, one may wonder if there is a correlation between growing number of various structures independent from mosque complexes and the literature of the period. For instance, Mustafa Fennî Efendi's (d. 1158/1745-6) Sahilname is a work written in mathnawi style depicting the beauties of two shores of the Bosporus starting from Galata to Rumelifeneri in Rumelian side and from Anadolufeneri to the Prince islands in Anatolian side. It is a pioneering work that led to emerge of a genre named after it. Besides, Dergehname by Müminzâde Seyyid Ahmed Hasîb (1166?/1752-53) and Hankâhname by Lutfî are valuable works written in verse in mathnawi style covering dervish lodges of Istanbul.[34] Considering this kind of works in the literature of this period, it is noticed that there was also an interest in city in Europe at the same time, namely in the 18th century. For instance, there are some encyclopedias covering cities such as Encyclopédie, published in France in mid-18th century and contributed by many authors.[35]

Although works mentioning and enumerating various structures of Istanbul such as Evliya Çelebi's Seyahatname exist in the seventeenth century, one can notice the emergence of relatively exceptional piece of writings as mentioned above or unprecedented works such as Ayvansarâyî's encyclopaedical book Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmî'. In this respect, it is seen that works focusing on Ottoman mosques or structures are relatively less in number previous to Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmî'.[36] One can refer to Sâî Mustafa Çelebi's Tezkiretü'l-Bünyân and Tezkiretü'l-Ebniye, works written in the 16th century on the life and works of Mimar Sinan[37], or Risale-i Mimariye written by Cafer Çelebi in 1614, a valuable book for architectural history dealing with the life and works of Sedefkâr Mehmed Ağa.[38] Written in 1751, Dâyezâde Mustafa's Selimiyye is also an important work dealing with Selimiye Mosque in Edirne.[39] Out of these works, Inciciyan's XVIII. Asırda İstanbul attracts the attention with its content covering various aspects of Istanbul such as its history, population, different types of structures located there, natural disasters etc.[40] There are also some works written by several authors following the path of Ayvansarâyî and refering to his work. However, these works will be mentioned in the section on Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmî'.

2. Ayvansarâyî Hüseyin Efendi

2.1. The Life of Ayvansarâyî

Our knowledge of Hâfız Hüseyin Efendi's life is limited with little information in some holograph copies of his works and narrations of famous biographical sources which mostly resemble each other in terms of their content.[41] He is known as Ayvansarâyî which refers to his place of birth. As stated in his ownership statement, he was from Toklu Dede quarter and a member of Janissary corps in the fifteenth regiment of sekbans.[42] Apart from his job, he says that he was among the 'mürtezika', salaried dependents, of the wakf of Bektaş Efendi Mosque in Galata.[43] As noticed in his nisba, he was a 'hâfız', knowing the Quran by heart, and his tutor was probably the imam of Toklu Dede Mosque, Şeyhülkurra, master of Quran readers, Halil Efendi (d. 1167/1753-4) whom Ayvansarâyî calls 'bu fakirin üstadı'.[44] Besides, he was also likely a follower of a dervish order.[45]

His father, Hacı İsmail Ağa, served for Mehmed IV's daughter Hatice Sultan as 'teberdarlar kethüdası', warden of halberdiers. He died in 1165/1752 and was buried next to the tomb of the Prophet's companion Abu Said al-Hudri in Toklu Dede quarter.[46] One of Hâfız Hüseyin Efendi's relatives, Hacı Mustafa b. Ahmed Çelebi was 'binâ emîni' (construction official) for the complex of Abdulhamid I. Apart from that, Hacı Mustafa also occupied a significant role in Istanbul as a 'şehremini'. He died in 1194/1780 because of his extreme fear following a violent earthquake and buried in the place called as Büyük Tokmak Tepe.[47] In addition, one can infer that Ayvansarâyî had a very close relationship with Müstakimzâde Süleyman Sa'deddin based on his numerous references to him in his works and the latter's role on his famous 'Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'' which will be mentioned later on.

In his summary of 'Hadîka', Şeyhülislam Sıtkızâde Reşid whose place of burial is located at Toklu Dede quarter[48] notes that Ayvansarâyî died in the middle of Ramadan 1201/1787 following his return from terâvih prayer in Zal Mahmud Paşa Mosque to the home of his relative who was the imam of Kızıl Mosque.[49] Although various sources state that his place of burial is in Zal Mahmud Paşa Mosque, the searches made there did not bring forth any trace of his gravestone.[50]

Since his role is worth to mention for understanding Ayvansarâyî, one should also investigate Müstakimzâde's biography and the contribution he made to the former's works. Born in 1131/1719 in Istanbul, he had a family from ulema group which made him familiar with ilmiye hierarchy. Apart from following classical madrasah curriculum, he also worked on calligraphy under famous calligraphers of his time. In addition to his education, he followed Nakshibandiyya order and attached himself to Shaykh Mehmed Emin Tokâdî to the extent that he was buried next to him upon his death in 1202/1788. His father was a müderris in Istanbul. Like his father, he also wanted to become a müderris and entered the exams for this purpose. However, he failed and focused on his works for the rest of his life. He had so many works on variety of fields such as religious sciences, adab, biography and literature.[51] Since its scope of study overlaps with that of Ayvansarâyî to a certain extent, biography has a notable place among them. Müstakimzâde's works on biography can be considered as exceptional comparing to those before in some respects such as their content. As mentioned before, around the 18th century, it seems that there are a number of biographical works covering the life of certain class of people such as sadrazams, calligraphers and shaykhs rather than including them as a whole like seen in previous centuries.[52] Among these, one can notice Müstakimzâde's writings such as Tuhfe-i Hattâtîn and Devhatü'l-Meşâyih. While the former is on the biography of calligraphers, the latter covers the biography of Ottoman şeyhülislams. It is clearly seen that Ayvansarâyî benefits from Müstakimzâde in his works such as Mecmua-i Tevârih, Vefeyât and Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmî'. Along with his own, Ayvansarâyî uses Müstakimzâde's chronograms while writing the death of historical personages such as sultans, viziers, founders and patrons of structures. In this respect, they share the same style in referring certain dates they mentioned in their works. Moreover, Ayvansarâyî, like Müstakimzâde, writes on biography and has some works on this genre such as "*Terceme-i Meşâ*yîh" (Biography of Shaykhs) and "Vefeyât-ı Selâtîn ve Meşâhir-i Ricâl" (Obituaries of the Sultans and Famous People). It is probably for this reason that Bursalı Mehmed Tahir describes him as a "biography writer".[53]

The relationship between Ayvansarâyî and Müstakimzâde is not limited with their using of chronograms and writing on same genre. According to a copy of Müstakimzâde's "Tahkîkü's-Salavât" which includes certain topics on daily-prayers, Ayvansarâyî had Hattat İbrâhim Tâhir Efendi, a pupil of Müstakimzâde, written the work in seeking goodness (tabarruk) in 1200/1785-6.[54] In addition, Müstakimzâde himself wrote chronograms for Ayvansarâyî's father Hacı İsmail Ağa, and his master Halil Efendi, which were used by Ayvansarâyî in his Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'.[55] When it comes to Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi', one should note the contribution of Müstakimzâde. In his famous addendum to Hadîka, Ali Satı Efendi states that Ayvansarâyî was able to write his Hadîka only because of Müstakimzâde's endeavor and perseverance.[56] Besides, there is a clue concerning Müstakimzâde's role on Hadîka in a marginal note written by Esad Efendi on folio 1^b of a Hadîka copy. Esad Efendi notes that Müstakimzâde was the author of Hadîka. However, it was later attributed to Ayvansarâyî since he was a friend of Müstakimzâde.[57] Following Esad Efendi, İbnülemin Mahmud Kemal also counts Hadîka when enumerating the works of Müstakimzâde in his edition of Tuhfe-i Hattâtîn which was published in 1928. However, he only refers to Ali Satı Efendi's words without making any other explanation.[58] Given these references, it seems that both did not only familiar with the works of each other, but also had a certain level of communication while they were alive.

Lastly, one of the characteristics of Ayvansarâyî is that he notes where he wrote his works or the manuscripts he copied. For instance, he ends one of the mecmuas he copied with this note:

"This book was written in Şemsi Ahmed Paşazâde Bey Mansion, known as Çukur Saray, opposite Rum Mehmed Paşa Mosque."[59]

Again, he writes in the colophon of his "Eş'arnâme-i Müstezâd":

"It was written in the coffeehouse of Kahveci Derviş Ahmed opposite Piyale Paşa Hammam."[60]

2.2. The Works of Ayvansarâyî

Ayvansarâyî has significant works offering a rich content especially for biography and Istanbul's urban history. Considered as a whole, some of his works seem supplementary to each other such as Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmî' and Mecmua-i Tevârih. Having a variety of chronograms and inscriptions from religious/civil structures in Istanbul, the latter was used by Ayvansarâyî in giving detailed information on the structures and people mentioned in the former.[61] Apart from that, one can easily notice that he started to write some of his works around same years and worked on them simultaneously such as Mecmua-i Tevârih in 1179/1765-6, Eş'arnâme-i Müstezâd in 1181/1767-8 and Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmî' in 1182/1768-9.[62] The works he wrote shows that Ayvansarâyî were familiar with Istanbul in general and interested in recording and sharing what he saw and read through his writings.

2.2.1. Mecmua-i Tevârih

The work contains various inscriptions from mosques, dervish lodges, medreses, fountains, bathhouses and other structures along with chronograms of some historical incidents. As seen in his other works, it also includes some biographical notes on prominent people.[63] Ayvansarâyî started to write it in 1179/1765-6 and continued to add his notes till 1201/1786-7 just before several months from his death. He used this work as a supplementary for his "Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'", "Vefeyât-ı Selâtîn ve Meşâhir-i Ricâl" and "Terceme-i Meşâyih" such that he copied and pasted some parts of it in these works. Aside from that, unlike his other works, Mecmua has an unorganized structure that each section seems randomly written through the book. Considering these aspects, it is a sort of draft used for his other works.[64]

There is a copy of Mecmua bearing authorial colophon in Topkapı Sarayı Müzesi Kütüphanesi. Although it is said that there is another copy having authorial colophon in Istanbul Deniz Müzesi Kütüphanesi, Günay and Turgut Kut state that this copy was written by Şeref Ergenekon in 1959 based on the one in Topkapı Palace.[65] The work was transcribed and studied by Vahid Çabuk in his undergraduate thesis in 1974. Later, it was published by Fatih Derin and Vahid Çabuk in 1985.[66]

2.2.2. Vefeyât-ı Selâtîn ve Meşâhir-i Ricâl[67]

Unlike Mecmua-i Tevârih, Vefeyât has an organized structure containing four parts. The first part includes the Ottoman sultans from Osman to Abdulhamid I giving the date of their birth, death and ascension to the throne. The second part covers 318 notable figures such as grand viziers, viziers and beylerbeyis along with their short biographies and the works they had in Istanbul where they buried. It follows a topographical order while introducing them. Differing from previous part, part III is on 87 historical personages buried outside of Istanbul. However, their charitable works are located there. Lastly, the final part focuses on those neither buried in Istanbul nor had any work there. This part contains 467 dignitaries, which makes the number of personages stated in the whole work 899 at total.[68]

Ayvansarâyî notes that he wrote the work in 1190/1776. However, one can notice that there are some figures who died after this date such as al-Hac Ahmed Paşa (d.1200/1785) which shows that he continued to edit his work for a long period of time like he did in Mecmua. There

[67] Unlike Crane; Eyice, Kut and Kut implicitly state that "Vefeyât-ı Selâtîn ve Meşâhir-i Ricâl" and "Vefeyât-ı Ayvansarâyî" (or Terceme-i Meşâyih) are the same work in different names. Therefore, they refer to three other copies of Vefeyât. However, they change their approach in later version of their article and state that the work has only one copy while the others are the copies of "Vefeyât-ı Ayvansarâyî". is only one copy of the work currently present in Istanbul Üniversitesi Merkez Kütüphanesi.[69] The work was again transcribed and published by Fatih Derin in 1978.[70]

2.2.3. Vefeyât-ı Ayvansarâyî

Resembling "Vefeyât-ı Selâtîn", it gives brief biographies of the Ottoman sultans, poets, scholars and Sufis with their date of death, and chronograms written on them. The work is also known as "Terceme-i Meşâyih" and "Tezkire-i Ayvansarâyî". There are 278 figures mentioned in the work. There is only one copy of the work in Süleymaniye Library.[71] According to the introduction written by Fatih Derin for Vefeyât-ı Selâtîn, he aimed for publishing the single manuscript by transcribing to modernized Turkish.[72] However, it was later edited and published by different authors.[73]

2.2.4. Eş'arnâme-i Müstezâd

It is a compilation of increment poems[74] collected from different *divan*s (collected poems) and arranged by Ayvansarâyî. He started to write this work in 1181/1767-8 and completed in 1194/1780. There is a single holograph copy in Istanbul Üniversitesi Merkez Kütüphanesi. It bears his ownership statement.[75] The copy is the subject of three MA theses.[76]

2.2.5. Aşık Ömer Divanı

Like Eş'arnâme-i Müstezâd, it is a poetical work including collected poems of Aşık Ömer (d. 1119/1707-8) who is a Turkish minstrel lived in Konya. It is assumed that he attended various wars through his life basing on the poems he wrote. In addition, his poems were read in dervish lodges.[77] There are three copies of the work, one of which was written by Ayvansarâyî himself.[78]

2.2.6. Mecmû'atü'l-Letâ'if Sandûkatü'l-Me'ârif

Discovered recently, the work includes a collection of 425 poems written by 227 poets dating from 15th to 18th centuries. Âşık Ömer is the most mentioned poet with his 27 poems through the work. At this point, it seems that Ayvansarâyî was especially interested in Âşık Ömer since he also prepared a collection of his poems as a separate work which is mentioned above. This work has only one copy bearing Ayvansarâyî's ownership statement dated 1182/1769-70.[79]

2.2.7. Naat Mecmuası

It is a collection of *naat*s, eulogies praising the prophet Muhammad, written in 1180/1766-7. There is a single holograph copy kept in a private collection belonged to Rıfat Kütük. He shares several images of the copy including the ownership statement of Ayvansarâyî in his edition of Vefeyât-ı Ayvansarâyî.[80] There is an MA thesis written on this work of Ayvansarâyî.[81]

However, there is no separate copy of this work. Ekinci says that the work exits at the end of the copy of Vefeyât-i Ayvansarâyî in Süleymaniye Kütüphanesi, Uşşaki Tekkesi, 365. 2.2.8. Mecmû'atü'l-İlâhiyyât fi'l-Makâmât

It is a recently discovered work of Ayvansarâyî covering various *ilâhî*s, poetries of religious inspiration. It was written in 1190 as stated in Ayvansarâyî's ownership statement on the copy which was sold out in an auction in January 2022.[82]

2.2.9. Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'

Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi', literally 'the Garden of the Mosques', is the most recognized and copied work of Ayvansarâyî, and a significant source for the urban history of Istanbul with its rich content. The word "Hadîka" is commonly used for works bearing an encyclopedic character such as "Hadîkatü'l-Vüzerâ" of Osmanzâde Ahmed Tâib (d. 1724), a work on Ottoman grand viziers, "Hadâ'ikü'ş-Şekâ'ik fî Tekmileti'ş-Şakâ'ik" of Nev'îzâde Atâ'î (d. 1635), a commentary on Taşköprizâde's biographical work on Ottoman scholars called "eş-Şekâ'ik en-Nu'maniyye". For this reason, the title of the book implies that it is an encyclopedic work enumerating mosques in a certain order. As the author himself notes in the introduction, the work covers mosques of Istanbul, their dependencies along with their patrons, secondary endowers, and the endowers of their minbars.

Given the great number of mosques listed through the book, one can easily notice that Ayvansarâyî put a systematic survey. He enumerates the mosques within the city walls in alphabetical order except of imperial ones mentioned in the beginning. Besides, he personally visited each mosque and performed prayer before 1182/1768, and probably took his notes at the same time. By 1193/1779, he started to write a fair copy based on the draft he had likely written during his visits. Finally, the work was completed in 1195/1780-81 after about two years of effort.

Even though there are many copies of Hadîka in different libraries, it seems that none of them is a holograph copy based on their date of copy, and handwriting. The list of the manuscripts is as follows:[83]

There are several works, commentaries and addendums written on Hadîka. Ali Satı Efendi's addendum is a significant one considering its contribution to the work. He expanded Hadîka by about half and added his commentaries on the monuments and personages. However, he also makes some changes in the body of the text by omitting six mosques and adding seven others. Besides, he rearranges the order of the mosques in the Anatolian shore of [84] This copy is not mentioned in Kut and Crane. According to the colophon in 262[a], it was written by Ömer al-Fâruk al-Dımaşkî in 27 Rebiülevvel 1228/30 March 1813 as an addendum to Hadîka. For more information concerning the manuscript see: Klaus Schwarz, "Die Sammlung Türkischer Handschriften in Der Staatsbibliothek Preußischer Kulturbesitz (Berlin/West)," Acta Orientalia Academiae Scientiarum Hungaricae 37 (1983): 111–20.

Istanbul and enumerates them by starting from the south instead of reverse order as in the original text. While the addendum was written between 1248/1832-3 and 1253/1838, it was published by Matbaa-i Âmire in two volumes in 1281/1865.[85] Like Ayvansarâyî, the information we have on Ali Satı Efendi can be found in his addendum. While he mentions the mosque of İbrâhim Ağa Çayırı in Kadıköy, he gives a detailed information concerning his father Mahmud Esad Efendi (d. 1228/1813), a kadı in İzmir, Edirne and Mecca respectively, and his grandfather Seyyid Osman Efendi (d. 1196/1782) whose place of burial is located at mentioned mosque.[86] In addition, Ali Satı Efendi himself was a molla and müderris in Edirne, and later received the pâye (degree) of Mecca. He was buried in Eyüp following his death in 1258/1842.[87]

A friend of Ali Satı Efendi, Süleyman Besim further enlarged the addendum of the former by adding new accounts till 1276/1859-60.[88] The manuscript currently exists in Istanbul University.[89]

Joseph von Hammer gives the list of the mosques mentioned in Hadîka along with a summary of their accounts in a section of his famous Geschichte des Osmanischen Reiches in 1833.[90] Even though it is relatively short comparing to the former, there is another list concerning the mosques of Istanbul in Hammer's Constantinopolis und der Bosporus published in 1822.[91] Like him, Şeyhülislam Sıtkızâde Ahmed Reşid Efendi also writes an abridgement of Hadîka in 1248/1832-3. There are two copies of this work.[92]

Hacı İsmail Beyzâde Osman Bey makes use of Hadîka and publishes his work called Mecmua-i Cevâmi' in 1304/1887.[93] This work covers mosques, dervish lodges, constructors of these structures, and mahalles in Istanbul. Resembling Ayvansarâyî, he follows an alphabetical order in his work. However, differing from him, he applies this rule for the structures outside the walls as well as those within the walls.[94]

Educated at Mekteb-i Harbiyye and served for the Ottoman army, Mehmed Raif (d. 1335/1917) wrote a supplementary work on Hadîka called "Mir'ât-ı İstanbul" which covers numerous monuments and structures in Istanbul as well as their inscriptions. The book contains the mosques and inscriptions that postdate Ayvansarâyî's Hadîka. It was published in 1314/1896 in two volumes after about ten years of effort by the author who personally visited each structure and recorded their inscriptions like Ayvansarâyî.[95] The first volume was later transcribed to modernized Turkish and published in 1996.[96] However, it was republished in two volumes in 2021.[97]

Tahsin Öz made us of Hadîka and wrote a book called "İstanbul Câmileri" which was published in the early 1960s. Consisting of two volumes, the work also gives the locations of mentioned mosques as well as relevant information on those built after the publication of Ali Satı's addendum. In addition, Öz revisits the text of Hadîka and states the changes made on various structures.[98]

Ahmed Nezih Galitekin prepared a detailed edition of Hadîka by using both manuscripts and printed edition. Along with various copies of Hadîka, he used unpublished addendum of Süleyman Besim when mentioning variant readings or additional accounts. The book was published in 2001.[99]

One of the best editions of Hadîka was published by Howard Crane who translated the book to English to make it accessible for non-Ottomanist readers.[100] Differing from Galitekin's edition, Crane made use of cartographic resources when giving the locations of the mosques if available. In this way, the work has become helpful and practical for georeferencing.

İhsan Erzi transcribed the Ottoman Turkish text of the first volume printed by Matbaa-i Âmire. He also referred to various readings existed in different copies of Hadîka. This edition was published in 1987.[101]

Necdet İşli and İsmail Büyükseçgin prepared a book called "Osmanlı Devri İstanbul Camileri" based on Hadîka. They aimed to present photographs of the mosques and dervish lodges mentioned in Hadîka. Most of the photographs given in the text were taken in 1940s. Moreover, the authors note the block and parcel number of given structures which is clearly important for tracing their locations. This book was published in 2017.[102]

There are also some theses and indexes giving the list of the mosques in Hadîka. Selim Nüzhet Gerçek wrote an index which was published in 1928[103] while two undergraduate students prepared indexes in their theses for volume I and II respectively.[104] In addition, there are several unpublished theses on Hadîka which either focus on certain sections of the book or transcription of it.[105]

3. Mapping the Data in Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'

Before starting to give detailed information concerning the content of the work, one should keep in mind that the oldest copy of Hadîka is dated 1813 which corresponds nearly 32 years after its completion. Moreover, this copy has some accounts, including mosques such as Selimiye, that are not present at the time of Ayvansarâyî. This situation goes for many other copies of Hadîka such as the one written by Rakım Efendi in 1231/1815-16. Apart from that, there are also some differences between the copies such as the existence of mahalles and the name, number, or order of the mosques. Additionally, the addendums written by Ali Satı and Süleyman Besim, dated 1253/1838 and 1276/1859-60 respectively, have crucial changes comparing to the manuscript copies of Hadîka. Since the work was published along with the addendums several times in different editions starting from 1281/1865 to early 2000s, the references made to Hadîka may not be consistent with what Ayvansarâyî stated in the late 18th century. For this reason, one should use both the manuscript and published edition of Hadîka in analyzing the accounts given through the work. As an example of variant accounts, one can check the statement concerning to the mahalle of Mehmed II's imperial mosque, known as Fâtih Mosque. The manuscript copies unanimously state that it has no mahalle whereas the published addendum says the opposite (see Figure 1-2). These example shows the importance of using different copies of Hadîka at the same time.

The book starts with the description of the imperial mosques and following that the mosques and the masjids are enumerated in alphabetical order within the walls unlike the rest of the city. Following that, Ayvansarâyî states the mosques outside the walls and those in Eyüp and its vicinities. After that, Ayvansarâyî takes the reader from Hasköy and goes on with Kasımpaşa, Galata, Tophane, Beşiktaş, Ortaköy, and all the way up to Rumelikavağı, the northern shore of the European side. Then passing through the Bosphorus, the enumeration continues with the mosques in the districts of Anatolian side; Üsküdar and its environs, and then ends with those in Anadolukavağı. Besides, one should note that Ayvansarâyî does not only give the names of the places that include mosques and masjids but also states Arnavutköy and Kuzguncuk, both have no mosque or masjid.

Ayvansarâyî always indicates whether the mosques within the walls have a mahalle or not. However, he does not follow this practice for the other mosques, especially if they do not have a mahalle. For this reason, one can precisely know how many of the mosques have a mahalle within the walls unlike the others. As for the number of mahalles, one can see that out of 875 mosques, 519 of them has mahalles and while 313 of these mahalles are within the walls.

3.1. The Perception of the City: Reclassification of the Istanbul Space

Throughout the book, the reader realizes Ayvansarâyî's classification of the districts and villages of Istanbul. His perception of the city to a certain extent differs from the classical classification of Istanbul as the walled city (nefs-i Istanbul), Eyüp, Galata and Üsküdar. For instance, the walled city, as perceived today, are divided into two as "within the walls" and "outside the walls" while the latter encompasses the area just outside the walls including southern and northern shores of the "historical peninsula" along with the vicinities of the Theodosius walls. Apart from that, he does not give a certain heading for the villages and places that are mentioned following Eyüp. However, he gives their names one by one in the beginning of the relevant section just after Eyüp as follows: Davud Paşa, Vidoz, Alibeyköy, Sadabad, Kâğıthane and Karaağaç. These places and villages are in the vicinity of Eyüp, and for this reason they can be grouped as those in "the environs of Eyüp". Interestingly, differing from the manuscripts of Hadîka, the published edition that includes the addendum counts Sütlüce Mosque and Kaysûnîzâde Masjid in the environs of Eyüp whereas they are counted in Hasköy in the manuscripts of Hadîka.[108] Following Hasköy, the author continues with Kasımpaşa in a separate section; however, as seen in the copy of Esad Efendi 2248, he also describes it as a sub-district (nâhiye) of Galata which is stated after Kasımpaşa (see Figure 3). Here, as he does in the walled city, he divides the Galata into two: Within the Galata walls and outside the Galata walls. Subsequently, he goes on with Tophane and Beşiktaş, stating each separately. Then, he enumerates the remaining places in the upper Bosporus of the Rumelian side, which are mostly villages hosting either only one mosque/masjid or a few of them. These villages and places are as follows: Ortaköy, Defterdar Burnu, Kuruçeşme Karyesi, Bebek Karyesi, Rumeli Hisarı, Balta Limanı, Emirgunoğlu, İstinye Karyesi, Yeniköy, Tarabya, Kefeli Karyesi, Büyükdere Karyesi, Sarıyer Karyesi, Zekeriyya Karyesi and Kavak Kalesi. At this point, one should note that there are some differences concerning the classification of these places among the published edition and copies of the manuscripts of Hadîka. The published edition of 1865 perceives each village and place separately and gives a number for each mosque and masjid. However, different copies of the Hadîka manuscripts have varying classifications such as the copy scribed by Rakım Efendi which considers the villages and the places between Ortaköy and Kavak Kalesi as whole. This copy has numerical sorting per district as noticed in the marginalia and starts to enumerate mosques and masjids from Ortaköy ending with Kavak Kalesi.[109] Apart from that, it is noticed that the published edition describes Yeniköy as a sub-district of Galata as seen in Kasımpaşa.[110] One can see same kind of approach in the Anatolian side. Following Üsküdar, Ayvansarâyî firstly states the places in the southern shores of [108] ibid, ed. Ali Satı Efendi, 309; ibid, (İstanbul: Süleymaniye Kütüphanesi, Esad Efendi, nr. 2248), 75a-b.

[110] ibid, ed. Ali Satı Efendi, 139.

Üsküdar along with some villages located in its east and then goes on with those in the north of Üsküdar up to the northern shores of the Black Sea. As seen in the case of the places between Ortaköy and Kavak Kalesi, Rakım Efendi's copy similarly perceives the places mentioned following Üsküdar as whole and give a numerical sorting on this basis.[111] In this respect, one realizes that the varying copies of Hadîka and the published edition share some common perceptions concerning the classification of the city as both conceive it mainly under four districts: The walled city, Eyüp, Galata and Üsküdar, and three sub-districts: The environs of Eyüp, the environs of Galata and the environs of Üsküdar. As noticed, the minor places and villages in the vicinities can be incorporated to these four districts as the environs of each. Additionally, it should be convenient and easier to analyze the districts with a few configurations. For instance, one may consider "outside the walls" and "within the walls" as whole. Moreover, it should be better to divide the environs of Galata and Üsküdar into two. The environs of Galata I will include Hasköy and Kasımpaşa whereas the second will have the places from Ortaköy to Kavak Kalesi along with Tophane and Beşiktaş. As for the environs of Üsküdar, the first has those in the south and the east of Üsküdar; Haydarpaşa, İbrahim Ağa Çayırı, Dedeler, Kadıköy, Sarı Kadı Köyü, Bulgurlu Karyesi and Kısıklı whereas the second encompasses the area from İstavroz to Anadolukavağı. In total, there will be nine regions (Map 1 and 2).

3.2. The Architectural Structures in Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'

Ayvansarâyî gives the list of 875 mosques and masjids in total. Although the book seems mainly on mosques, it is in fact a compilation of religious and civil structures of Istanbul. Ayvansarâyî makes use of mosques when mentioning their founders' places of burial, charitable foundations, and those buried around them. He often uses chronograms when giving dates of death and construction along with recording the inscriptions of given monuments. Besides, he shares notable personages affiliated with the structures he introduces such as the succession of shaykhs for the case of dervish lodges. He also mostly states whether mentioned mosque has a mahalle or not at the end of each section. Apart from that, if a mosque is renovated upon an earthquake or fire, he specifies the date of reconstruction and the name of the patron on occasion. As an example of that, one can check the information given in Halid b. Zeyd Mosque, known as Eyüp Sultan Mosque, and Kızıl Minare Mosque, whereas the former was reconstructed after the great earthquake of 1766, the latter was rebuilt upon the Unkapanı fire in 1160/1747.[113]

Through the book, there are various type of structures other than mosques, which are as follows: 214 mekteb, 202 çeşme (fountain), 156 türbe (tomb), 122 madrasa, 97 hammam (bathhouse), 83 tekke and zaviye (dervish lodge), 50 sebil (public drinking water), 48 residential structures such as palaces and kiosks, 46 kapı (gate), 23 imaret (public kitchen), 21 kütüphane (library), 17 darülhadis, 14 khan, 6 tabhane (hospice) and 5 darüşşifa. One can see mentioned structures in Maps 3 to 19. These maps aim to show the positioning of above-mentioned structures in a way that the readers would be able to trace them easily. Due to the high number of structures "within and outside the walls" and "Eyüp", there are much more maps showing these two districts unlike the rest. Considering types of structure stated throughout the work, it is seen that, unlike Evliyâ Çelebi, Ayvansarâyî mostly focuses on Islamic monuments rather than structures allocated to non-muslim inhabitants of the city such as churches or synagogues.[114]

Additionally, Ayvansarâyî often points out some related structures and places for the mosques such as mezaristan (graveyards), şadırvan (ablution fountain) and mahfil (screened and elevated lodge in a mosque). When indicating the location of given structures, Ayvansarâyî uses several words such as muttasılında/ittisalinde (next to), mukabilinde (opposing to), havlısında (courtyard of), canibinde (beside). He often put the words "der kurbu" (near to) to indicate where the mentioned mosques are nearly located.

[113] Ayvansarâyî Hüseyin Efendi, "Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'", 1230. (İstanbul: Süleymaniye Kütüphanesi, Esad Efendi, nr. 2248), 44b; 68a-69a.
[114] Emin Selçuk Taşar, "Tahrir, Tasnif ve Tavsif: Evliya Çelebi Seyahatnamesinde Şehir ve Mimari," (Mardin Artuklu Üniversitesi, Lisansüstü Eğitim Enstitüsü, Doktora Tezi, 2020), 246.

Apart from that, he states approximate location of the residences of notable figures when giving a detailed information in related structures. For instance, he refers to the dwelling of a çorbacı (colonel) from the fifteenth regiment of Yeniçeri corps in the account of a mosque called Yıldız Dede.[115] Ayvansarâyî also shares the place of his own residence near to Toklu Dede Mosque which is in his mahalle.[116]

As noticed in the title "Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'", mosque constitutes a great proportion of the book, so much so that it is the most mentioned structure among the others such as madrasas, dervish lodges, bathhouses etc. Ayvansarâyî chooses the words "câmi" and "masjid" to describe mosques. Although these two words are sometimes used indifferently in daily language, the meaning that they bear is not the same such that câmi, literally meaning "gatherer", refers the mosques that have minbar, which make them available for Friday prayer, whereas masjid, "a place to bow down", indicates those are smaller and having no minbar. In this respect, one can translate "câmi'" as "congregational mosque", "Friday mosque" or only "mosque", and "masjid" as "small mosque" or again use the same term for the latter as it is common in daily language. However, one should note that Ayvansarâyî prefers to go on with masjid for small mosques that later turned into "mosque" with the endowment of a minbar. He presumably picks up the once commonly used term while leaving the latter. In this respect, I suggest referring the former as "once-masjid" and the latter as "built-as-mosque".

The mosques and masjids are named after according to several elements like their constructor, endower of minbar, location, physical description, or a well-known structure nearby. Most of the mosques bear the name or nickname of their constructor such as Bâzergân Mosque of Bâzerganbaşı Acem Hüseyin Efendi while a good number of them are named based on the location and structures close to them such as Edirnekapı Mosque located close to Edirne Kapı. The mosques have, on occasion, irrelevant names as well, such as Deniz Abdal Mosque which, as Ayvansarâyî states, have no direct relevance to Deniz Abdal, a man from the time of [116] ibid, 40a-41a.

Mehmed II buried close to this mosque. Additionally, if a masjid or mosque is converted from a church, it occasionally takes the name of the one doing this conversion.

As seen in Table 1, in total, there are 498 mosques in Istanbul and 288 of them, nearly sixty percent, are within the walls whereas Üsküdar has forty-eight, which makes it the second district with the most mosques. Out of 498, there are 207 built-as-mosques while 291 of them are those once-masjid. Again, the walled city includes the most with 100 built-as-mosques.

3.2.1. Within and Outside the Walls

There are 534 mosques and masjids within and outside the walls. Mosques consists of 309 of them whereas masjids are 225 in total (Map 20). When grouped as built-as-mosques and once-masjids, one can notice that the area includes 105 built-as-mosques and 204 once-masjids (Map 21, 22, 23). As for the mahalles of mosques and masjids, 327 of them have mahalles while the rest, 207, have no mahalles (Map 25, 28).

Most of the once-masjids have mahalles with a rate close to eighty percent which corresponds to 151 out of 204. Similarly, most of the built-as-mosques have mahalles (65 out of 105). In total, 216 mosques have mahalles (Map 26, 29). Besides, more than two-third of built-as-mosques were built before 16th century while the rest was constructed mostly in late 17th and 18th centuries. Most of the built-as-mosques were built and patronized by the ruling elite while once-masjids were at first constructed by some locals, craftsmen, shaykhs, imams etc. and later turned into mosques with the help of either a person from the ruling elite or again from the locals of that district. Apart from that, there are ten mosques, all once-masjids, as being part of other structures such as khan, tekke, madrasa. Seven out of ten were built before 17th century and four of them are dervish lodge-masjids while three of them are masjids within khans. The rest is part of madrasa, darülhadis and tomb. Moreover, just two of these ten mosques have mahalles.

Analyzing 225 masjids within and outside the walls (Map 24), one can see that 111 masjids have a mahalle while 114 of them have no mahalles (Map 27, 30). Furthermore, nine masjids are located outside the walls of the Golden Horn, five masjids are closed to the Merkez Efendi Mosque and its environs, two are near to Yedikule, and lastly one is in Sarayburnu. Unlike mosques, there are not any masjids on the Marmara Shore of the walls. Apart from that, it is noticed that construction dates and the names of constructors are not always mentioned in given masjids unlike the mosques. For this reason, it is not possible to classify all the masjids according to their date of construction. However, it is obvious that most of the datable masjids were constructed before the 17th century.

Out of 225 masjids, fourteen of them are dervish lodge-masjids, six are madrasa-masjids, six khan-masjids, two darülhadis-masjids, one darüşşifa-masjid, one library-masjid, one mevlevihane-masjid and one tabhane-masjid. Apart from that, there are thirty upper-story masjids of which four are khan-masjids located to the grand-bazaar and its environs. Moreover, fourteen masjids are converted from churches.

3.2.2. Eyüp

Eyüp has twenty-three mosques and twenty-three masjids (Map 31). Eight of the mosques are built-as-mosques while the rest are once-masjids (Map 32, 33, 34). The built-as-mosques are mostly datable to pre-16th century except of two built in mid-18th century whereas nearly two third of the once-masjids are dated to mid-18th century. Thirty of the mosques and masjids have mahalles (Map 36, 39). As for the mosques only, five of the built-as-mosques and ten of the once-masjids have mahalles (Map 37, 40). Namely, about two-third of the mosques have mahalles in Eyüp. Among the patrons of the mosques, one can clearly see that the dominance of the ruling elite while there are considerable number of shaykhs, hajis and craftsmen patronizing the mosques in this district. In addition, the district has only one upper-story mosque.

Apart from that, the district has twenty-three masjids (Map 35) and at least thirteen of them were constructed before 17th century. Fifteen of the masjids have mahalles (Map 38, 41) and two of the masjids are upper-story. Again, two of them are dervish lodge-masjids and one is a madrasa-masjid.

3.2.3. The Environs of Eyüp

The environs of Eyüp encompass following locations: Davud Paşa, Vidoz, Alibeyköy, Sadabad, Kâğıthane and Karaağaç. These places are grouped as those closed to Eyüp and includes five mosques and three masjid (Map 42, 43) while none of them has a mahalle. Except for Ali Bey Karyesi Masjid in Alibeyköy, all of the mosques are built-as-mosques (Map 44). As for the date of construction, Ali Bey Karyesi Masjid and Sadabad Mosque were built in the reign of Ahmed III while the rest were constructed in early and mid-16th century.

There are three masjids in these areas (Map 42, 43). Two of them, Kâğıthâne Karyesi Masjid and Tahta Kadı Masjid, are in Kağıthâne while one, Tekke Masjid, is in Sadabad. Tekke Masjid is datable to late 17th century, Kâğıthâne Karyesi Masjid is to mid-16th century while Tahta Kadı Masjid is undated in given entry. Lastly, Tekke Masjid and Tahta Kadı Masjid are dervish lodge-masjids of this area.

3.2.4. Within and Outside the Galata Walls

There are twenty-nine mosques and masjids within and outside the Galata walls (Map 45, 46) while fourteen of them has a mahalle (Map 50, 53). Out of twelve mosques, eight are built-as-mosques and four are once-masjids (Map 47, 48). Besides, seven of them have a mahalle (Map 51, 54). Except of famous Arap Mosque built in 8th century, the other seven built-as-mosques were constructed by the Ottomans in different times varying from 16th to mid-18th centuries while the datable two once-masjids are mosques of mid and late 18th century. Apart from that, there is three upper-story mosques within and outside the walls of Galata.

There are seventeen masjids within and outside the Galata walls (Map 49) and seven of them has a mahalle (Map 52, 55). Six masjids were constructed before 16th century and three were in 17th and 18th centuries whereas the rest are undated. Apart from that, as noticed in their names, Yelkenci Hanı Masjid and Galata Mevlevihânesi Masjid are respectively parts of a khan and mevlevihâne, and lastly, there is a masjid called Manastır converted from a church.

3.2.5. The Environs of Galata I

The environs of Galata I include two districts Hasköy and Kasımpaşa. There are fifty-three mosques and masjids in the area and twenty-eight of them are mosques (Map 56, 57). Apart from that, thirty-seven of the mosques and masjid have a mahalle (Map 61, 64). As for the mosques, eight of them are built-as-mosques and twenty are once-masjids (Map 58, 59) whereas twenty-two of them has a mahalle (Map 62, 65). Besides, there is only one built-as-mosque, dated to 18th century, in Hasköy while the other five are in Kasımpaşa. Except for Ali Paşa Mosque and Sütlüce Mosque dated 18th century, all of the built-as-mosques are datable to mid- and late 16th century. Apart from that, Kasımpaşa distinguishes with the patrons of the mosques comparing to other districts such that one can notice the names of naval commanders among the constructors and endowers of minbars.

There are twenty-five masjids in Hasköy and Kasımpaşa (Map 60) while fifteen of them has a mahalle (Map 63, 66). The date of construction of at least ten masjids traces back to 15th and 16th centuries while four are datable to early and mid-17th century, one is to mid-18th century and the rest are undated. Apart from that, as noticed in their names, one masjid, Kasımpaşa Mevlevihânesi Masjid, is converted from a mevlevihâne and another one, Hüsâmeddin Uşşâki Tekkesi Masjid, is from a dervish-lodge.

3.2.6. The Environs of Galata II

The environs of Galata II include following locations: Tophane, Beşiktaş, Ortaköy, Defterdarburnu, Kuruçeşme, Bebek, Rumeli Hisarı, Balta Limanı, Emirgunoğlu, İstinye, Yeniköy, Tarabya, Kefeli, Büyükdere, Sarıyer, Zekeriya Karyesi and Kavak Kalesi. Due to the large quantity of structures in above-mentioned locations, it is neither convenient nor practical to show such a big amount of area in a small-scale map. For this reason, above-mentioned locations are shown in three different maps. Besides, one can firstly see the summary of the whole data of these three maps, then observe them separately by referencing three maps.

There are eighty-six mosques and masjids in the area (Map 67, 68, 78, 79, 87, 88) whereas seventy of them has a mahalle (Map 72, 75, 83, 85, 91, 94). As for the mosques, the area includes forty-four of them, twenty-seven built-as-mosques and seventeen once-masjids (Map 69, 80, 89). Aside from that, thirty-six of the mosques has a mahalle, which is a large number considering the amount of the mosques (Map 73, 76, 84, 86, 92, 95). In addition, the area hosts forty-two masjids (Map 71, 82, 91) and thirty-four of them has a mahalle (Map 74, 77, 85, 93, 96).

One can see that Tophane has sixteen mosques, ten of them built-as-mosques and six once-masjids (Map 69). Thirteen of them have a mahalle whereas the rest have not (Map 73, 76). In addition, one can see that the dates of construction and endowment of minbar are high in number from late 17th to 18th centuries. As noticed in Kasımpaşa, there are naval commanders among the constructors and endowers of minbars in Tophane. As for masjids, the district hosts twenty-one of them (Map 71). Apart from that, most of the masjids, seventeen of them, have mahalles while only four masjids do not have any (Map 74, 77). Unlike the other mentioned districts, masjids that trace back to 17th century are high in number in Tophane. Considering the datable fifteen masjids, eight of them were constructed in 17th century, two in late 16th century, three in early and mid-16th century, one in late 15th and another one in early 18th century. Lastly, there are three dervish lodge-masjids and a masjid converted from church in the district.

Following Tophane, Beşiktaş has three built-as-mosques and four once-masjids (Map 69) whereas only one of them, Hazinedar Ağa Mosque, has no mahalle (Map 73, 76). In addition, only two mosques were built after 18th century. Again, as in Tophane, the names of naval commanders attract the attention among the constructors of the mosques in Beşiktaş.

Apart from that, the district has twelve masjids (Map 71) and only three masjids have no mahalles whereas the rest have mahalles (Map 74, 77). As for the date of construction, eight of them are masjids of 15th and 16th centuries, one is of 17th century, another one is of 18th century and the rest are undated. Besides, the district has a masjid used as a mevlevihâne called Beşiktaş Mevlevihânesi Masjid.

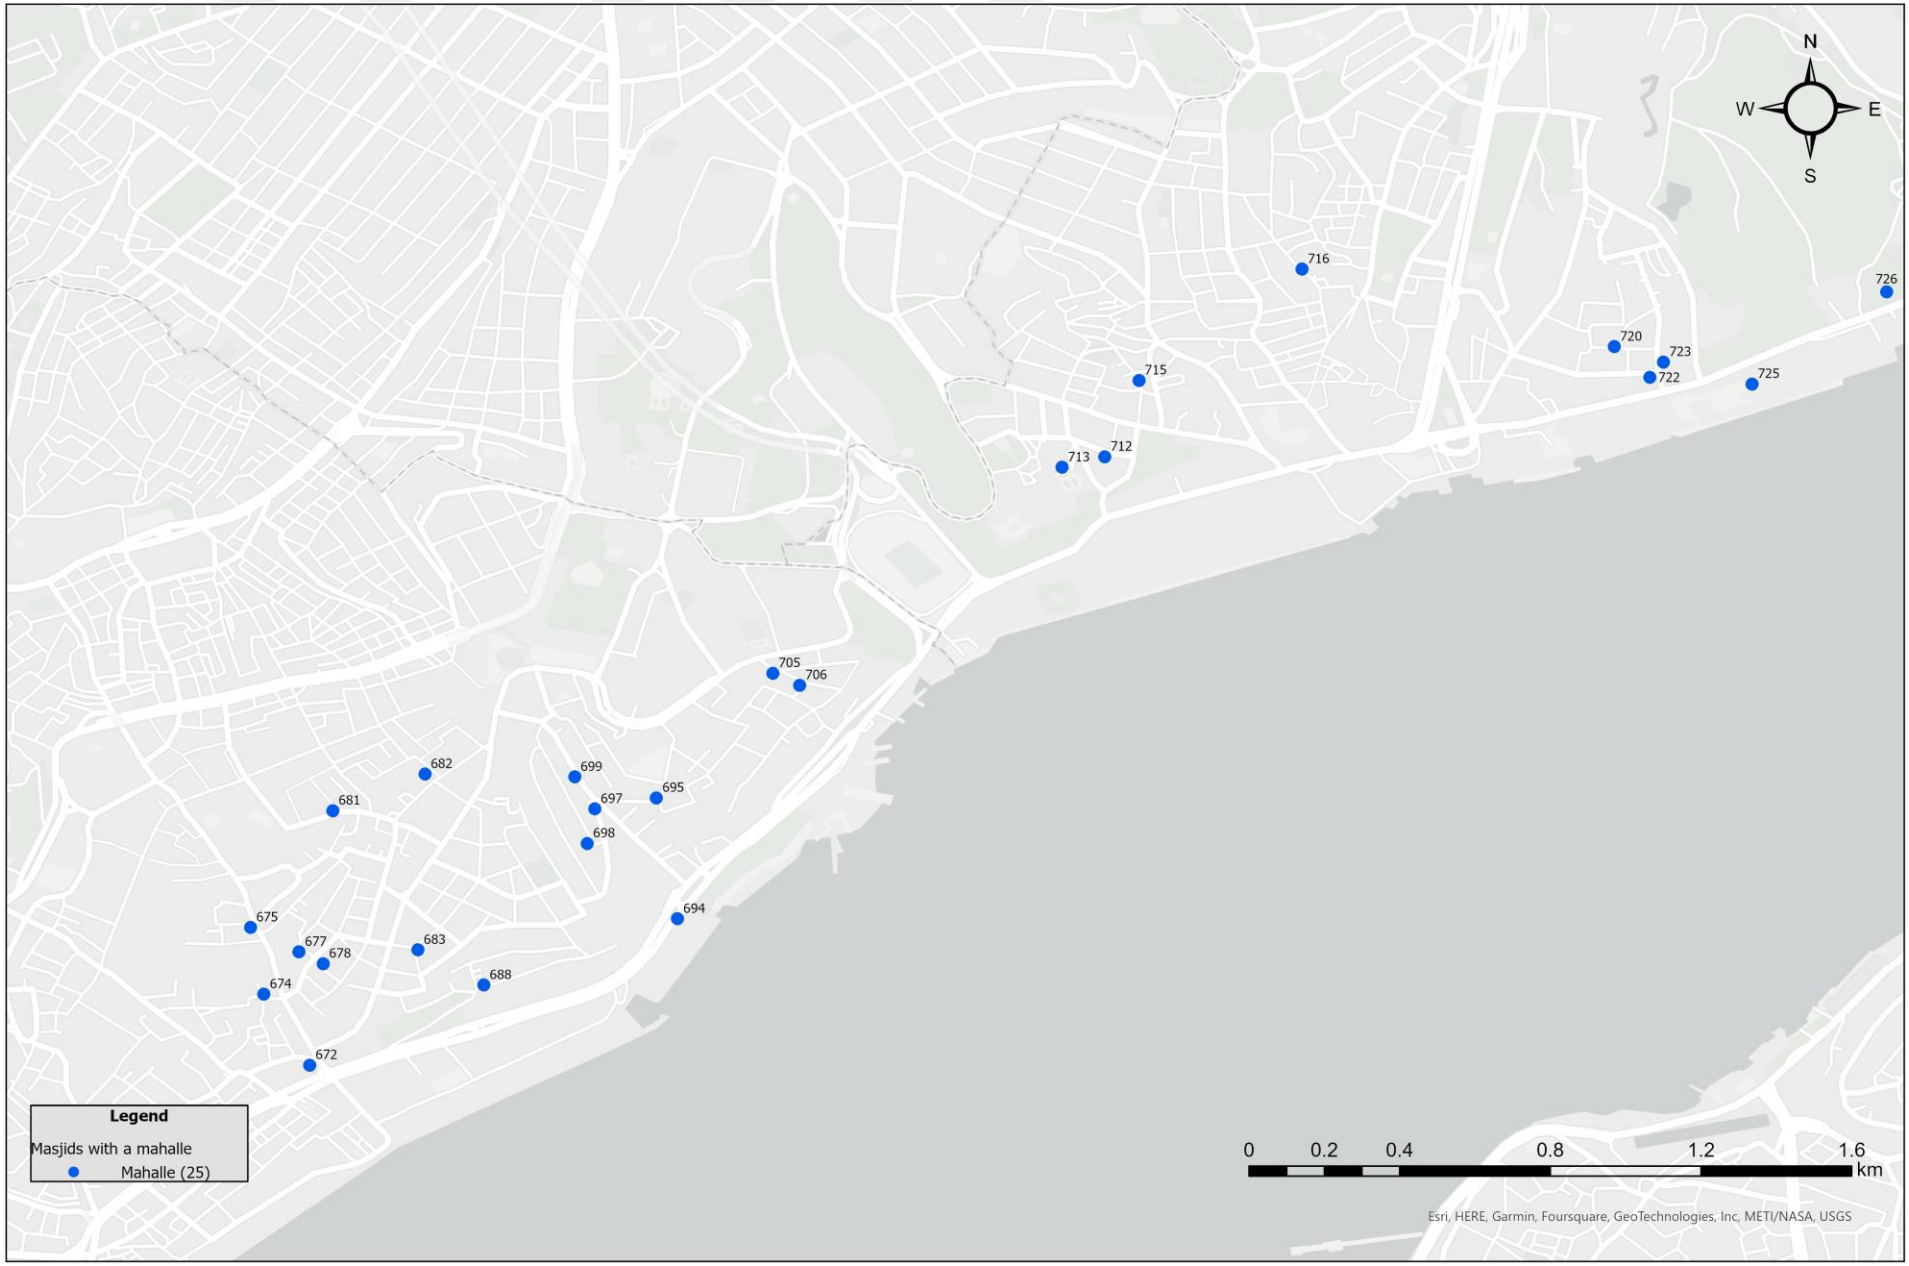
Map 77: Masjids with a mahalle in Tophane and Beşiktaş (25 out of 26) (see Appendix I)



Moving up through Beşiktaş, Ayvansarâyî states some places classified as villages (karye) as follows: Ortaköy, Defterdarburnu, Kuruçeşme and Bebek. These villages have five mosques in total (Map 80). Each of them has only one mosque except for Ortaköy, which has two. There are four built-as-mosques and only one once-masjid, Melekî Hâtun Masjid of Ortaköy. Again, each mosque has a mahalle excluding Bebek Mosque (Map 84, 86). Among the abovementioned places, only Bebek has a masjid called Kayalar Masjid which traces back to mid-17th century (Map 82). The masjid has a mahalle (Map 83, 85).

Following these villages, the book continues with Rumeli Hisarı. There is one built-as-mosque and two once-masjids there (Map 80). Each of the mosques has a mahalle (Map 84, 86). The only built-as-mosque, Hisar Mosque, was constructed by Mehmed II in 856/1452 while the other two's date of construction are unknown; however, they became mosques in early 17th and 18th centuries. As for the masjids, Rumeli Hisarı has three of them (Map 82) and all three have mahalles (Map 83, 85). Two datable masjids, Fenârî Masjid and Arpa Emini Masjid are respectively masjids of mid-15th and early 16th centuries. As for the other masjid, called Torlak Dede, it is undated.

Passing through Rumeli Hisarı, Ayvansarâyî mentions Balta Limanı and Emirgunoğlu. Balta Limanı has one mosque which is once-masjid (Map 61) whereas Emirgunoğlu includes a masjid (Map 82) built in the reign of Abdulhamid I and each of them has a mahalle (Map 83, 85).

Following that, the author respectively enumerates the names of the places as İstinye Karyesi, Yeniköy, Tarabya, Kefeli Karyesi, Büyükdere Karyesi, Sarıyer Karyesi, Zekeriyya Karyesi and Kavak Kalesi. These places are either villages or minor places located close to seashore in general and hosts twelve mosques and four masjids (Map 87, 88). Besides, twelve of them has a mahalle (Map 91, 94). For mosques, one can see nine built-as-mosques and three once-masjids (Map 89). Excluding Kara Kethüdâ Mosque, Zekeriyâ Karyesi Mosque and Vâlide Mosque, each of them has a mahalle (Map 92, 95). Besides, one can trace back the endowment date of minbar for two once-masjids to 18th century. As for the masjids, one can only find four of them in above-mentioned places (Map 90). Three masjids are in İstinye and one is in Kavak Kalesi. Excluding the last one, all mescids have mahalles (Map 93, 96). Among the datable masjids, Kürkçü Masjid and Neslişah Masjid, both in İstinye, were built in 16th century.

3.2.7. Üsküdar

Üsküdar includes seventy-nine mosques and masjids (Map 97, 98) while thirty-five of them has a mahalle (Map 101, 104). As for the mosques, there are forty-eight of them in Üsküdar. Thirty of them are built-as-mosques whereas eighteen are once-masjids (Map 99). Apart from that, twenty-one of them has a mahalle (Map 102, 105). Moreover, the district has four dervish lodges functioned as mosque such as Hüdâyî Aziz Mahmud Efendi Tekkesi Mosque. It is noteworthy that most of the once-masjids, at least thirteen, were endowed with minbar in 18th century. In addition, the district includes thirty-one masjids (Map 101) while fourteen of them has a mahalle (Map 103, 106). Apart from that, at least eleven masjids were constructed before 17th century whereas five of them were in 17th century and lastly seven were in 18th century. As noticed in the case of mosques in Üsküdar, one can clearly see that there are many masjids built in 18th century in this district.

3.2.8. The Environs of Üsküdar I

The environs of Üsküdar I includes places, mostly villages, that are mentioned following Üsküdar and they are located on the south and east of the district. Ayvansarâyî states them as follows: Haydarpaşa, İbrahim Ağa Çayırı, Dedeler, Kadıköy, Sarı Kadı Köyü, Bulgurlu Karyesi and Kısıklı. The environs of Üsküdar I has eight mosques and three masjids (Map 88, 89) whereas two of them has a mahalle (Map 112, 114). Out of eight mosques, three of them are built-as-mosques and five are once masjids (Map 109). Besides, only two mosques have a mahalle (Map 113, 114). Four of them were functioned as mosques in mid- and late 18th century.

In the environs of Üsküdar I, there are three masjids (Map 111). Kadıköy has two masjids whereas Kısıklı has only one masjid. Besides, none of them has mahalles (Map 113). Leaving out Çakır Ağa Masjid which is undated, Cafer Ağa Masjid of Kadıköy and Kısıklı Masjids of Kısıklı were constructed in the second half of 16th century.

3.2.9. The Environs of Üsküdar II

Starting from upper Üsküdar to the northern shores of the Black Sea, Ayvansarâyî states following locations: İstavroz, Çengelköy, Kuleli, Vaniköy, Kandilli, Anadolu Hisarı, Kanlıca, Çubuklu, Paşabahçe, İncirköy, Beykoz, Yalıköy, Hünkâr İskelesi, Dereseki Karyesi, Akbaba Karyesi, Yoros Kalesi and Anadolu Kavağı. Grouped as the environs of Üsküdar II, there are twenty-one mosques and eight masjids in total (Map 115, 116) whereas only four of them has a mahalle (Map 120, 122). In addition, out of twenty-one, there are fourteen built-as-mosques and seven once-masjids (Map 117), and three of these twenty-one mosques have mahalles (Map 122). Lastly, the datable once-masjids belonged to 18th century in general.

The places that have masjids in this area are as follows: Kuleli, Anadolu Hisarı, Kanlıca, Beykoz, Hünkâr İskelesi, Yûşâ Dağı and Anadolu Kavağı. Except for Hünkâr İskelesi which has undated two masjids, each of them has only one masjid (Map 119). Additionally, none of the masjids has a mahalle except of Sinan Efendi Masjid in Kanlıca. Among the datable masjids, three of them are masjids of 16th century, one is of mid-17th century and another one is of mid-18th century.

4. The Content Analysis of Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'

With a wealth of information concerning various structures and actors in the eighteenth century Ottoman Istanbul, Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi' is a quite functional work that is open to numerous valuable discussion topics. Beyond any doubt, this content of the work makes it difficult to come up with a comprehensive evaluation covering every aspect of the work in detail. Therefore, one may conduct research on a certain theme in the book such as mentioned constructors, inscriptions, endowers of minbars etc. in further studies. However, this chapter will examine some of the most important aspects of the book and one of them is Ayvansarâyî's statement concerning the presence of a mahalle belonged to given mosques and masjids.

The number of mahalles and their location may help the reader to come up with some assumptions on the perception of mahalle at that time, namely the late 18th century (Table 2). However, it is quite important that one should not only refer to Ayvansarâyî's work concerning the number of mahalles in Istanbul but also cross-reference to other sources such as Ottoman archives, court records and endowment deeds. That is because the number of mahalles mentioned in Hadîka are very high in number when compared to the other sources, which leads the reader to ponder upon to what extent given mahalles in Hadîka correspond with the true number of mahalles. There are several reasons lie behind the inconsistency of the number of mahalles among the sources. Firstly, the names of the mahalles may vary from one document to another since spatial and mental boundaries of mahalles are different in the minds of residents of mahalles and state officials. For the case of the former, the sense of belonging comes to the fore whereas the latter concerns with administrative issues such as taxation, public order, endowment records.[117] Therefore, the definition of mahalle and its scope pave the way for a change in number for different sources. Additionally, it occurs that different mahalles may have same names such as two Sinan Ağa mahalles in Ayasofya.[118] Moreover, one should not ignore the fact that when Ayvansarâyî ends an account of a mosque or a masjid with a statement "the mosque/masjid has a mahalle", it does not necessarily mean that given mosque or masjid has a mahalle named after itself. In this case, this statement may also refer that "given mosque or masjid belonged to a mahalle under a different name" as shown by Bekman in Table 2.

As for the statement "the mosque/masjid has no mahalle", it may point out that the mosque/masjid does not have a mahalle; however, it is located in a renowned place belonged to another mahalle. For instance, Peykhâne Mosque does not have a mahalle whereas the name "Peykhâne" is used for positioning of other mosques and masjids in their respective locations such as Uzun Şuca Masjid and Hamza Paşa Masjid.[120] Another example is Lâlezâr Masjid which does not have a mahalle; however, the word Lâlezâr is used for the same purpose as in the case of Peykhâne.[121] For this reason, one can assume that these two, Lâlezâr Masjid and Peykhâne Mosque, and other mosques/masjids with no mahalles are a part of "minor mahalles" or "sub-mahalles" in the minds of inhabitants of that area.[122]

Another reason for the inconsistency of mentioned mahalles in Hadîka is that the statements concerning mahalles in several manuscripts and published edition of the work contrasts with each other. One of the most striking example of this is the varying records regarding to the mahalle of Çizmeciler Tekkesi in Tophane. The statements in three different copies of Hadîka, and the published edition are as follows: "its mahalle is unknown", "it does not have a mahalle", "it has a mahalle" and "its mahalle is Kabataş" (see Figure 4-7). This difference may stem from the corrections of copiers. Nevertheless, it is still interesting to see such an inconsistency among various copies. Considering this, it is quite confusing for a reader to understand the perception of mahalle for Ayvansarâyî. In this respect, one may wonder how Ayvansarâyî perceives mahalles since they can be categorized under varying units such as administrative unit, physical unit, or combination of different units.[123] It may be possible to come up with a clear conclusion concerning Ayvansarâyî's mahalle perception with a reference to other archival materials.

When analyzed district by district, one can see that the mosques and masjids with mahalles are predominant in following districts: "Within the walls", "Eyüp", "within the Galata walls" and "the environs of Galata I-II". As for those with no mahalle, these mosques and masjids are high in number in following places: "Outside the walls", "the environs of Eyüp", "outside the Galata walls", "Üsküdar" and "the environs of Üsküdar I-II". At this point, it is seen that Üsküdar is the only major district among the other three with a lower number of mahalles. In addition, it is noteworthy that the number of mahalles in "the environs of Üsküdar II" are clearly lower than those in "the environs of Galata II" which are located directly opposite to the former. This may stem from the fact that these places are less densely populated areas comparing to the other districts. Considering Üsküdar and its environs, these areas witnessed a population growth especially in the 18th century[128] and therefore, the number of mahalles along with mosques and masjids started to increase as seen in the chronogram composed for the completion of İhsâniye Mosque.[129]

Apart from that, one may wonder whether there is a correlation between mosques and the existence of mahalles. There are a number of studies showing that places of worship are significant in definition of mahalles and they are gathering points for inhabitants sharing common religio-social origin.[130] However, as Kafescioğlu shows, it is seen that the late 15th and early 16th Ottoman Istanbul had also many mahalles named after some other units and elements such as commercial centers, city gates, certain Byzantine landmarks etc. rather than mosques or masjids only, and these mahalles were later replaced with mahalles bearing the names of mosques or masjids corroborating the conception of the city in the view of Hanafî law by the Ottomans in later periods.[131] Besides, one may assert that there is a direct connection between mahalle and mosque based on the status of imams as representatives of given mahalles. Indicating this point, Açık states that imam is not only considered as a person leading prayers in mosques but also an official appointed by ruler to maintain the order and supervise the mahalle. For him, one can have a look at the way kadi registers described imams to see their association with mahalles such as "İskender Paşa Mahallesi İmamı…".[132] Apart from that, one may assert that the presence of a mosque is one of the indicators of population in that area and its environs, thus may lead to emergence of a mahalle there. For instance, Zenburcubaşı Masjid, located near to Tahtakale, has no mahalle and open for noon and afternoon prayers only.[133] There may be several reasons lying behind this practice such as population mobility at these hours in Tahtakale. However, it is seen that the masjid does not gather people enough for performing the other prayers. In addition, one can assume that if a masjid turns into a mosque, it means that this masjid has become available for performing Friday prayers and it hosts relatively high number of people who perform their daily prayers there. Considering the correlation between increase in number of once-masjids in Üsküdar and Eyüp and their pace of population growth in late 18th century, the existence of once-masjid in a district may indicate population mobility through that area. Taking into consideration all of these points, one can clearly see that mosques in one way or another may give a few glimpses concerning population growth; however, it does not necessarily indicate that each mosque has a mahalle belonged to it, namely it may be a part of another mahalle under a different name. As seen in Table 3, the number of built-as-mosques with mahalles in "the environs of Eyüp", "outside the Galata walls", "Üsküdar" and "the environs of Üsküdar I-II" are less than those without mahalles. Apart from that, one can notice that the number of masjids with mahalles are much more than those without mahalles in following districts: Eyüp, Kasımpaşa, Tophane and Beşiktaş. As for the other districts, the number of masjids with and without mahalles are close to each other except for “the environs of Eyüp”, “outside the Galata walls” and “the environs of Üsküdar I-II”. For this reason, it seems not reasonable to claim that mosques or masjids always leads to emergence of their own mahalles.

Analyzing the date of their construction, one can easily notice that there is a great deal of construction for built-as-mosques from 1453 to the end of 16th century. Most of the "once-masjids" became mosques in the 18th century. In this respect, there are three districts standing out comparing to the others: Üsküdar, Eyüp and the area just outside the walls. Leaving out the walled city, these three have lots of the masjids that turned into mosque in the 18th century. Eyüp, for instance, has at least ten out of fifteen masjids that became mosques in this era, whereas "outside the walls" has eleven out of sixteen. Moreover, this area attracts the reader's attention with the number of its upper-story mosques which constitutes nineteen out of thirty-eight. Apart from mosques and masjids, it is seen that the number of *mekteb*s and fountains are on the rise in 18th century based on the construction dates or the date of constructors' death as stated by Ayvansarâyî.

Topographical description of Istanbul is one of the points that stands out through the book. Considering the city's history, the settlement and expansion of Byzantine Constantinople was mainly within the walls.[134] This situation changed following the capture of the city by the Ottomans in 1453 and the city expanded beyond the Theodosius walls to Eyüp with the construction of the Eyüp Complex upon the discovery of the grave of Abu Ayyub al-Ansari. Although it is argued that Mehmed II's initiation of constructing a complex outside the city walls was one of the signs of a reluctance to settle the intramural which is due to the clash of his imperial vision manifesting itself within the city and the ghazi vision[135], one can say that following the construction of the complex, Eyüp was attached to the city. Apart from Eyüp, Galata, a former colony of Genoa, became more than a suburb[136] and turned into a dynamic district located just opposite to the walled city. Lastly, Üsküdar witnessed a steady growth in the number of structures such as mosques and hammams, thus was incorporated to "Great Istanbul" through time.[137] As noticed in the words of Ayvansarâyî, he classifies the city under four main districts as follows: the walled city, Eyüp, Galata and Üsküdar. However, it is seen that the boundaries and scope of Galata and Üsküdar expanded and reached through the shores of Bosporus all the way up to the northern shores of the city in the 18th century. One can observe this expansion in Ayvansarâyî's enumeration of mosques and masjids along with the other structures located the environs of Galata II and Üsküdar. The date of construction of mentioned structures predominantly corresponds to 18th century. In addition, the number of masjids that turned into mosques in these two places are considerably high comparing to the other districts. One can trace the widening and scope of Istanbul's topography in a map showing and depicting the city (Map 123-128). Prepared by the students of Mühendishâne-i Berrî-i Hümâyûn in 1845, this map gives the location of mosques, masjids, renown spots, gardens, paths, slopes and piers in Istanbul. In this respect, it is quite useful for positioning mosques and masjids mentioned in Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi'. Besides, it also indicates that the city expands through the upper Bosporus and the environs of Üsküdar and Eyüp.

5. Conclusion

Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi‘ stands out as unique and unprecedented work considering its content which mainly offers an enumeration of mosques and masjids of Istanbul in encyclopedic way. Differing from other encyclopedic works such as Keşfü'z-Zunûn, the work is on structures not personages varying from scholars to men of letters. Although it resembles Evliyâ Çelebi's famous travel book called Seyahatnâme, Hadîka again distinguishes itself from the former with Ayvansarâyî's discourse in enumerating structures which is considerably systematic. In this respect, he mostly follows a certain pattern in giving the accounts of mosques and masjids starting from name of constructor and endower of minbar if any, date of construction and endowment of minbar, some structures closed to mentioned mosque or masjid, some events or stories related to mentioned personages or structures and ending with statement concerning the existence of a mahalle. In view of these aspects of the book, it seems that Ayvansarâyî may have wanted to record the accounts of growing number of mosques and masjids along with various monuments such as fountains, hammams, libraries and dervish lodges since Istanbul witnessed a considerable speed up in constructing process during the eighteenth century, when the work was firstly written. Apart from that, Ayvansarâyî's work also reflects the writing taste of the period which includes a significant number of mecmuas on a wide range of topics. At this point, a vast number of chronograms and selected couplets from different divans or its rich content having various collected piece of information are all some common characteristics noticed in mecmuas and Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi‘.

As for the topography of Istanbul, one notices that Ayvansarâyî implicitly divides the city into four main districts: Istanbul proper, Eyüp, Galata and Üsküdar. In addition to these four districts, there are some villages and minor districts located in the environs of these four. However, it is seen that it is not exactly possible to show borders separating the environs of these four districts unlike the main four. In addition, as seen in different copies of the work including published edition, the districts of mosques and masjids sometimes vary from one copy to another. For this reason, one can claim that the boundaries of mentioned districts are open to change. Apart from that, these districts, villages and other mentioned places in Hadîka shows that the city expands through the environs of Eyüp, Galata and Üsküdar in growing pace during the eighteenth century, and, let alone its environs, Üsküdar itself stands out as being a focal point for building activities. In this respect, the work gives us some clues concerning the formation of Great Istanbul through time.

Ayvansarâyî's conception of mahalle is one of the things that the reader should ponder upon. When one counts the number of mosques and masjids that have a mahalle, it is clearly seen that the total number of mahalles are very high compared to the mahalle lists of the 19th century Istanbul. Matching them with the mahalles in these lists, one realizes that not all the mosques and masjids have a mahalle of their own; on the contrary, some of them belong to the mahalle of another whereas some others have their own mahalles. As for mosques and masjids stated as having no mahalles, they may belong to a minor mahalle nearby as conceived by inhabitants of respective areas. For this reason, one may argue that the perception of mahalle is open to different variations as seen in the case of Ayvansarâyî's Hadîka. Since mahalle may be described based on different categories such as administrative unit, physical unit, or combination of different units, it is important to understand what exactly Ayvansarâyî refers to with mahalle. It seems that one should evaluate the conception of mahalle in Hadîka with reference to different sources and detailed comparisons.

Lastly, it is obvious and significant that historians should have a look at different copies of Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi' along with its published edition when they conduct research on the eighteenth-century Ottoman Istanbul. That is because the published edition has some crucial changes and edits that would directly affect conclusions asserted from the work. In addition, although the oldest manuscripts are datable from the years 1813 to 1850 which postdate 1780-81 when the work was firstly written, one should prioritize these manuscripts over the published edition of 1865 which includes the addendum completed by Ali Satı Efendi in 1838. There are several reasons lying behind this approach. Firstly, the number of mosques and masjids along with other related structures are higher than those in the copies of Hadîka which are probably close to the original text that written in the late eighteenth century. Secondly, the statements concerning the existence of a mahalle belonged to mentioned mosques and masjids vary from the copies of Hadîka and the published edition. Besides, information regarding to personages that are related to these structures may change in the latter. Lastly, it is quite important that there may be some other changes that would be noticed only after a detailed comparison between the copies and the published edition.

To conclude, Hadîkatü'l-Cevâmi' offers considerably valuable piece of information on not only mosques and masjids that exist in the eighteenth-century Istanbul, but also various structures and monuments related to or independent from mosques and masjids. Besides, the work presents the list of a vast number of historical personages who either actively takes a role in mentioned structures as being constructors or endowers of minbar, or stated as for varying reasons such as being an important figure of their time. In this respect, it is noteworthy that the work would also be quite useful when evaluated by using numerous sources that have any data concerning structures located in Istanbul. Lastly, every single type of account in the work would be a subject of further studies or become a matter of discussion for historians when analyzed through the tools of digital history.
